LOS ANGELES (Variety.com) - Billie Eilish fans will get her "Happier Than Ever" album in July, but when it comes to really living happily ever after by attending her tour, that'll have to wait till early next year. The singer announced Friday that her long-delayed arena tour will kick off Feb. 3.

Her 32-date outing in the United States will run just over two months, into the first half of April. From there, Eilish takes about a two-month break before doing 18 shows in Europe, covering a period of approximately a month, from the beginning of June into the first days of July 2022.

Tickets for buyers who sign up for Ticketmaster's Verified Fan program will go on sale May 26 at noon local time and be available for 10 hours. (Patrons have until May 23 to sign up for the platform in preparation for the Eilish on-sale.) From there, remaining tickets will be put up two days later, on May 28, again at noon in local time zones.

Eilish just released another single, "Your Power," in advance of the July 30 release of her second full-length album.

The first U.S. date will be Feb. 3 at New Orleans' Smoothie King Center. From there, she moves through the South, upper Midwest, eastern states and Canada on her way to Feb. 18-19 dates at Madison Square Garden. Mid-March finds her heading west, with the American part of the tour climaxing in hometown shows at L.A.'s Forum April 6, 8 and 9, the only U.S. venue where she's doing a three-night stand.

Eilish does have a second three-nighter on the books over in the U.K., as she's set to perform June 10-12 at the O2 Arena in London. The overseas leg wraps up July 2 in Zurich.

Is this Eilish's first arena tour? Yes, but with a very big asterisk. She had one scheduled for 2020, but had only completed three dates before announcing that the remainder would have to be postponed due to the pandemic. Ultimately, those dates were finally canceled outright in December of last year, leaving her truncated three-gig run in March 2020 as one of the shortest arena tours in history.

For this tour, Eilish announced that she will be hooking up with sustainability partner Reverb, with a "Billie Eilish Action Village" at each stop focusing on climate justice and BIPOC- and women-led environmental organizations. !@COPYRIGHT=© 2021 Postmedia Network Inc. All rights reserved.
